Successive Blooming

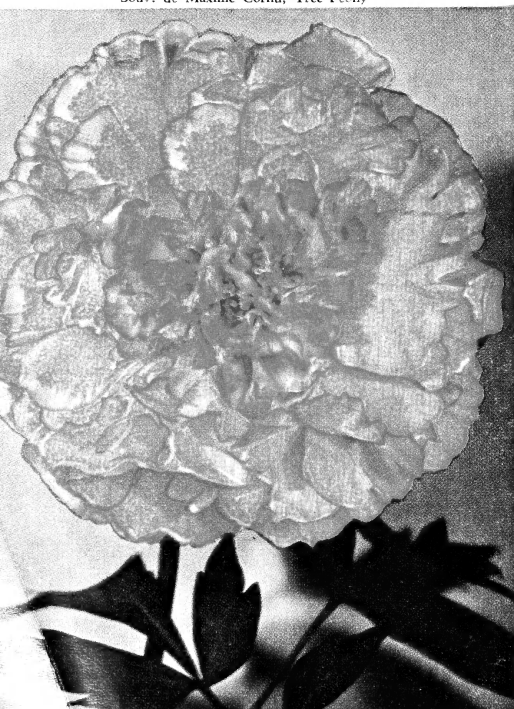

Miniature Iris Collection

A succession of low-growing miniature beauties for planting on the edge of a bed or for bordering a walk, or for planting in the rock garden, or in front of taller varieties. They are Gems of Beauty wherever you plant them. They all blossom early in the spring, ahead of other Iris, in April and early May on Long Island, a month earlier in the South. Some of them flower again in the fall and others occasionally throughout the summer. The flowers are quite large and showy and freely produced on stalks 6 to 12 inches tall. This collection contains a fine color range.

Souv. de Maxime Cornu, Tree Peony

The Tree Peony ~

MOST GORGEOUS FLOWER IN ALL THE HORTICULTURAL WORLD

They make a woody shrub-like growth, much like a Rhododendron, and do not die to the ground as other Peonies do. Each year they get larger and finer and it is nothing unusual for an established plant to have 100 or more huge blossoms. They flower about 3 weeks earlier than herbaceous Peonies and require no special care. Here is a group of the finest.
